

We would like to cordially invite you for a procurement webinar titled:

“How to develop a career in procurement and supply chain.”

Context The pandemic outbreak shook up the traditional view of the workplace. Not only did it dramatically changed the way we understand the value of the f2f interactions, but organisations continue to grapple with the complexities of unexpected needs for workforce restructuring.

Procurement roles are not sheltered from changes in companies’ workforce strategies, regardless of its added value in managing increasingly complex supply chains. Short-term, managing supply chains is tantamount to managing supply partners, thus focusing on people interaction. Long-term, the impact of remote work and an increasing integration of technology will have implications also on procurement operations and their analytical backbone.

We would like to explore with you how young professionals can sustainably develop careers in procurement and supply chain in such a context.

How will this webinar look like?

This online 1.5-hour event will consist of topic-related presentations delivered by three established procurement professionals (the panel), a student’s perspective, webinar discussion and Q&A session with participants.
